OF STONE AND SKY

A NOVEL

MERRYN GLOVER

After shepherd Colvin Munro disappears, a mysterious trail of his twelve possessions leads into the Cairngorm mountains. His foster sister Mo and prodigal brother Sorley are driven to discover the forces that led to his disappearance.

As a former church minister and current owner of the local pub, Mo thinks she knows everyone's story: Colvin's Traveller mother, alcoholic war-vet father, Bolivian wife, musician daughter, bird-obsessed son, his friends and foes. Sorley, returning home from his life in the City, brings unsettling revelations.

The story circles out to embrace the entire community, its history and the landscape that shapes them. Spanning almost a century, the novel is a paean to the connections between people, their land and way of life. A profound mystery, a political manifesto, and a passionate story of love, it is shot through with wisdom and humour.

Merryn Glover was born in Kathmandu and grew up in Nepal, India and Pakistan. Her first novel, A House Called Askival, was published in 2014. She has written four radio plays for BBC Radio 4 and BBC Radio Scotland and numerous short stories. Australian by citizenship, she lives in the Highlands and has called Scotland home for over 25 years. She lives in the Scottish Highlands and is available for interview.
